Genre: Sci-fi, Action, Comedy, Musical, Drama, Adventure, Mature, Mystery

In the year 20XX, an aspiring artist and his band members set out to make it big in the vibrant and adventurous city of Miami. There are a variety of strange happenings and events in Wynwood Miami, but the most typical problem that its residents encounter is inexplicable abductions and serial murders. Stacey Hunter is a tall, youthful, handsome, and multi-talented musician who lives carelessly in Wynwood. He's also enamored with disco (although he's 21), the golden era of music, and has developed an 80s-inspired fashion style that makes him look hippie-like. Because of his unique demeanor, Stacey is extremely sociable and caring. A free-spirited person who believes that life is more enjoyable when it is more lively. Stacey is the lead guitarist and backup vocalist for "ZERO 2 INFINITY," an underground band. After the band's failed attempt to gain popularity, Stacey and his bandmates decided to call it quits after their final gig.

All of his efforts have been wasted due to the stress of rebuilding his life from a terrible past. He has no choice but to continue his prior job of bounty hunting as a high school dropout who is currently unemployed. After making this decision, he goes to the drugstore to get his rehabilitation medicine, but he is interrupted by a wounded high school girl named Lillian Lopez, who tells him that she needs his help to flee the country because she is being pursued by the "Ghost of Wynwood," the local town serial killer. Stacey was first hesitant to assist her request until he was handed a platinum debit card by Lillian, who stated that this represented all of her parents' fortune and that she promised to pay him at least a million dollars if they succeeded. Stacey only decided to take this job because he needed money and was intrigued by the mystery because his younger brother had been a victim of the serial killer's actions.

After abandoning bounty hunting, his first job is to act as a bodyguard and transporter for a little girl as they search for answers to a riddle that no one dares to solve. They both got into Stacey's van, which he dubbed the mystery box (a reference to Scooby-Doo) after they reached an agreement. As the two set out on their journey, Stacey attempts to strike up a conversation with Lillian, but she remains silent and uninterested. Surprisingly, while Stacey is driving, an 8-year-old girl comes from the rear of the van to jump scare him. Esmeralda Pena, the daughter of one of his bandmates, was her name. Despite her insistence on accompanying them on their trip, Stacey chooses to turn around and return home because the road ahead is treacherous. As a close friend of her father's, he recognized that he was responsible for her safety after she ran away from home to join him on a journey without telling anybody.

After thirty minutes on the road, men in black in armored cars approached them, threateningly. Stacey tries to relax by taking his stress medicine, but he accidentally took an AXIS pill, which caused him to pass out on the road. His medication appears to have been swapped at the drug store. Their pursuers appear to have fled as they lie asleep on the road. Stacey begins to question whether or not what transpired was true after regaining consciousness. If what happened was real, he's taken on the riskiest mission he's ever done. He enlists the help of various illegally skilled friends to see if he can get out of the country alive, as the girl he is with is a target. The group will face a variety of challenges as they journey from Florida to Mexico, including the US government, the drug cartel, bounty hunters, strangers, freaks, and the most bizarre variety of possibilities. However, one thing appears to link all of the events that have occurred on the road, and that is the "Ghost of Wynwood."

The history and development of the various characters from the PROJECT–AXIS storyline are the focus of this side story. The main antagonist is Albrecht Van Klaus, the protagonist is Stacey Hunter, and the supporting character is Elijah Bellard.

Albrecht Van Klaus- A mysterious person with a deceptive aura. One of the series' most infamous villains and the mastermind behind Stacey's trio's moving from Florida to Mexico. A man with a charming appearance and a strong perfume scent that gives the impression that he is wealthy. He is said to have the face of an actor because it looks perfectly sculpted. Even though he's in his thirties, he appears young for his age. After his multiple showers a day, he cleans and exfoliates his face. As a doctor, he is expected to ensure the highest standards of hygiene. When he is not at work, he prefers to dress professionally, as if he were a business investor, rather than in his lab coat.

However, everything about him is more faked than real, as his secret actions are inhumane toward people, deeming him to be a disgusting person on the inside. He is a doctor, but he murders people; he is a Catholic, but he has no faith in God, and he is a neurosurgeon, but he has an unstable mental state. Despite working for the government, he has committed every possible crime documented by the government. Murder, torture, genocide, terrorism, trespassing, enslavement, drugging, manslaughter, harassment, animal cruelty, and many other crimes fall into this category. The only information available about his job is that he may be working at the most secretive US government facility, possibly in AREA 51.

In his spare time, he stalks and murders young women for no apparent reason. He will go to any length to fulfill his desire. In some cases, he mentally scars some of his victims before murdering them, manipulates and uses others to get to them, kills many people just to get to them, befriends and deceives them, and even marries one of his victims. He is sometimes at odds with himself because, despite the fact that he kills and tortures people, there are times when he has helped others. He's like a mix of everything you can think of. As he kills people to find himself and become whole, he sees himself as a hollow entity that is not in the real world. His character is too complex to put in detail. Despite the fact that all of the villains in the story appear strange and disturbing, he appears to look the sanest of them. He is, however, one of the most mentally unstable and brutal characters in the story.

Stacey Hunter- The main character in the PROJECT-AXIS storyline. A 21-year-old man with shoulder-length blonde hair and bright green eyes who is obsessed with the 1980s. Rick James, Elvis Presley, and Michael Jackson are his musical holy trinity. His red hippie-style clothing and star-shaped pink glasses are the most noticeable aspects of his outfit. A relatively tall and handsome young man who makes a lot of female acquaintances. One of the series' most recurring jokes is that people call him "David Bowie" because he bears a passing resemblance to the celebrity. The coincidence is that his father is British, and his mother is from New York, where he and his younger brother were born and raised before moving to Florida. Despite his pleasant attributes and easygoing lifestyle, his past is a sad subject he tries not to discuss.

From his childhood to his early adulthood, he has had a series of bad luck. Among the significant events is his father abusing and abandoning his mother in a vulnerable state. His mother became an alcoholic and began abusing and cursing him, while his disabled brother was considered a burden. His parents were never married, he has no idea where his father is after he abandoned them, and he had to take his brother with him while leaving their mother in New York. Despite the fact that his father rarely visits the house, he had never seen him since his younger brother was born. His mother, on the other hand, directed all of her rages at her two children. Life became difficult for the two brothers when they were forced to fend for themselves at a young age. Stacey's brother was autistic and five years younger than him, but he was the most important person in his life.

The two brothers, aged 11 and 6, arrived in Florida with only $30 in their pockets. Stacey had to do a lot of odd jobs and sometimes steal to support his brother, and he became malnourished as a result. Nobody offered them assistance because they were unimportant street children, but only one man offered assistance because they were lying on the cold street. Ganja Rufus, a Jamaican immigrant, was the first positive male figure in Stacey's life. Despite the fact that he sells herbs and cannabis, he has a good heart. He even encouraged the two brothers to start school and was one of the main reasons Stacey became interested in disco music. He didn't like 80s music at first, but he felt obligated to repay the man for his support. With time, he grew to like it and eventually became obsessed with it. Stacey was average in academic ability, but he was a gifted dancer and musician. Art and music were his favorite subjects. His brother was bullied in school for being awkward, and he had to repeat many classes. Life began to even out for the two brothers, but before Stacey's sixteenth birthday, his brother went missing, and Ganja Rufus' body was discovered in an alleyway. The killer was never found, and the police are unable to search for the boy's traces. Stacey became depressed and lonely as a result, dropping out of school and eventually becoming a drug addict at a young age. With the help of one of his classmates, Elijah Bellard, he began bounty hunting as a job and quit two years later to start a band.

Elijah Bellard- Elijah Bellard, who comes from a family of Jewish bounty hunters, is one of Stacey's most trusted colleagues and friends. Bounty hunting is the riskiest yet most straightforward way to make a lot of money; the riskier the job, the higher the pay from the clients. Elijah was born into an Amish family with traditional tastes and culture. His family is wealthy and well-known in the underworld of bounty hunting. His father is a very tall middle-aged skinny man who wears a monocle and has a variety of skills in trap making and electrical inventions. Their family has a habit of growing out their hair until it reaches their backs. Elijah is the same age and height as Stacey, with long black brushed hair and nerdy frameless glasses that emphasize his silver eyes. His personality is the opposite of Stacey's, being reserved and overly serious at times. He suppresses his emotions regularly to appear professional, but he is a kind person at heart. Unlike Stacey, who enjoys disco and funk, Elijah appears to prefer opera and classical music.

Elijah excelled in school and was the pride of the school in academic competitions. Elijah met Stacey in middle school when he was new to town. They weren't friends at the time, but they became acquainted when Elijah covers for his classmates when asked about what Stacey and other students were doing when avoiding classes. Even though he was mocked for his name, it didn't bother him in school because he was never bullied. During his school years, he was timid, but he eventually rose to the position of school president before graduating. One thing that everyone admires about him is that he does not meddle in other people's affairs, as most intelligent students do. His father decided to pass on the family tradition of bounty hunting to him after he graduated. As the lone child in a traditional family, he had no choice but to accept his father's proposal. His father then proceeded to explain the techniques and family history to his only son.

Elijah was surprised to learn that his family has hunted vampires, werewolves, and other urban legend creatures. Because bounty hunting is in Elijah's bloodline, he intends to carry on his father's legacy. He studied computer sciences in college and took on bounty hunting jobs as a part-time job. Within those years, he met Stacey on the side of the road in a terrible state and decided to help him because they knew each other in middle school but hadn't seen each other in years. Stacey was cared for by Elijah's father until he was stable enough to stand on his own. He also taught Stacey how to be a bounty hunter and paired him with Elijah to form a bounty hunting duo. They worked together, completed missions, and became close friends until Stacey decided to take a break and form a band. After completing his bachelor's degree, Elijah became a full-time bounty hunter, wearing a long dark trench coat with a bow tie. He had a successful career with many accomplishments, but recently he was assigned a job by a unanimous client to search for one of the Ghost of Wynwood's missing victims. As the main storyline progresses, this job will eventually lead him to meet Stacey's trio along the way.
