Bio

Elijah Bellard is a tall bounty hunter with long hair that reaches his back, as is traditional among his Amish family. His most defining trait is his striking eye color which makes it look silver. He maintains the impression of a tidy professional whose primary focus is to get the work done. Bounty hunting includes performing odd jobs as requested by clients, with the payment based on the risk of the job. Elijah wears eyeglasses for his safety, and it appears that he inherited ocular albinism from his father's heritage. Despite his minimal self-defense and marksmanship training, he can easily handle himself in a dangerous situation. He is a brilliant strategist with a knack for craftsmanship, making him an invaluable asset in the completion of tasks. Stacey is Elijah's closest friend; in fact, he is his only true friend. They have contrary opinions on many issues, but they are such close friends that they rarely argue. What's interesting about Elijah is that, while he is religious, his morality toward certain people is questionable. Unlike Stacey, who avoids murdering and hurting people on the job, Elijah judges criminals and decides whether or not to kill them.

If he comes into contact with child predators or killers on the job, he has no problem killing without hesitation. When interrogating others, he goes to extreme lengths, earning him a cold reputation among the criminal underworld. He is smarter than Stacey, but he lacks emotional control over others. He does his job and tries to please his clients as much as he can, and he only accepts the riskiest job offer from powerful clients. Some missions are illegal, but his severe methods of dealing with difficulties appear to make him more trustworthy and expensive in the bounty hunter market. His father was also a well-known bounty hunter, and he strives to live up to that legacy. He may appear cold on the outside, yet he is a thoughtful individual who strives to protect the innocent. He makes sure that he never harms children, as this is just a moral obligation. He might not be fond of children but if a child is involved, he politely declines the offer.

He appears to be a quiet individual who replies to everything directly to the point. Some people may think he's old-fashioned or boring, but that's exactly how he was raised. He likes classical music and Charlie Chaplin movies, but he dislikes having long conversations with strangers. Due to the stress of his job, he has recently developed a habit of smoking tobacco on occasion. To uphold his code of professionalism, he always strives to discriminate between personal concerns and client requests. He appears to be more dangerous than he looks since he has expertise in killing and kidnapping people, but only those he believes deserve it. As a somewhat religious person, he just prays to God to forgive him and continues with his deeds afterward. He always finds a way to escape from the police as his vehicle is stocked with rifles, weaponry, and contraptions made by his father. His greatest talent is not his intellect or courage, but rather his ability to determine if someone is lying due to his judgmental character. A man with uncanny sarcasm who always finds a way to get the last word in an argument and bad mouths people when insulted first.

History

Elijah Bellard, who comes from a wealthy family of Jewish bounty hunters, is one of Stacey's most trusted colleagues and friends. As an only child, his childhood was lonely because both of his parents worked during the week. He frequently wears glasses due to a genetic eye condition. When he was younger, he spent most of his time with his butler and housemaid, and he didn't have many friends who came to his house. He spent much of his time reading books and taking violin lessons, and he didn't watch television until he was thirteen. He rarely left his house and was educated in a devout household. He was homeschooled until the beginning of middle school. Unlike Stacey, who enjoys disco and funk, Elijah appears to prefer opera and classical music.

Elijah excelled in school and was the pride of the school in academic competitions. Elijah met Stacey in middle school when he was new to town. They weren't friends at the time, but they became acquainted when Elijah covers for his classmates when asked about what Stacey and other students were doing when avoiding classes. He, like the others, had a crush on Annabelle Lee since the day he met her in middle school, but he never expressed his feelings, even after years passed. He was aware of most of the commotions happening in school but he can keep secrets without anyone telling him to. During his school years, he was timid, but he eventually rose to the position of school president before graduating. His shy nature quickly changed into someone who strives for action. He was an active member of the occult club, music club, and hackathon teams in high school. One thing that everyone admires about him is that he does not meddle in other people's affairs, as most intelligent students do. His father decided to pass on the family tradition of bounty hunting to him after he graduated. As the lone child in a traditional family, he had no choice but to accept his father's proposal.

Elijah was captivated when he discovered that his ancestors had hunted vampires, werewolves, and other urban legend animals. However, these were only old myths with no solid sources, although they had certainly hunted something similar, but not in the occult. The Bellards have served for the US government for decades, and when their services were terminated, a US president was assassinated in his car. Elijah intends to carry on his father's legacy because bounty hunting is in his lineage and he is fascinated in the occult. In college, he studied computer sciences and worked as a bounty hunter on the side. During that time, he came across Stacey on the side of the road in a bad state and chose to help him because they had known each other in middle school but hadn't seen each other in years. Stacey was cared for by Elijah's father until he was stable enough to stand on his own. He also taught Stacey how to be a bounty hunter and paired him with Elijah to form a bounty hunting duo. They worked together, completed missions, and became close friends until Stacey decided to take a break and form a band. He has no relationship experience in contrast to Stacey as he is less emotional.

Stacey is one of his closest friends, and he sees him as the brother he wishes he had but will never admit it. When they were teamed together, Stacey was the moral controller for their actions, assisting them in minimizing the damage they caused, and he was the team's strategist. Elijah became a full-time bounty hunter after finishing his bachelor's degree, dressed in a long dark trench coat with a bow tie. He became a menace among hunters when he parted ways with Stacey, and he invites danger wherever he goes. Nobody believes he was a timid kid back then, given the fact that he instills terror in the hearts of many dangerous men. He had a successful career with many accomplishments, but recently he was assigned a job by a unanimous client to search for one of the Ghost of Wynwood's missing victims. As the main storyline progresses, this job will eventually lead him to meet Stacey's trio along the way.
