The NTH God is a being who exists before space, time, matter, or existence. The NTH God has always existed in every imaginable reality existence was produced by the impact of the NTH God Lower mortals cannot sense or see him since his body is distinct in shape from everything else and he has no actual form. He appears as a blank humanoid figure with clear bodily traits. His skin is little more than a beam of light, he has no hair, and he only has six fingers. His body is shaped like a silhouette, and he has a primarily masculine appearance. He lacks a nose and no openings in his ears. His tongue has a large red eyeball and his eyelids resemble a pair of teeth, which distinguishes him. Within his eyelids, he has a pair of crimson pupillary eyes with pitch-black sclera. His mouth is always smiling, and his tongue is always visible between his teeth. He is believed to have a volatile nature. He can appear to be a prankster and a comic one minute and then transform into a cold and ruthless person with a keen and frightening glance the next. His voice is a mash-up of children's, elderly, masculine, and female voices. The Erus, the primordial engineers, have no name and no designated terms to define them. Their earliest followers gave them this name since "Erus" means "Deity" in their tongue. Beyond the universe, there are only five realms of existence. The first plane is inhabited by humans, daemons, elves, and their dimensions, as well as the multiverse. Heaven and hell reside on the second plane. The third dimension, where the Adno and Nodam races live, and the outcome of their eternal war determines the balance of good and evil in existence.

The fourth plane is where inconceivable conceptions like life, time, space, and other relative concepts find a shape as sentient creatures and exist for the universe to have meaning.

The fifth plane

This is the only place where the Erus may be found; there is nothing else in their surroundings. The Erus has one mind but several bodies. There is no stated explanation for why they chose to split up. They've had a separate number since parting apart. Because they have yet to produce anything, the Erus are more like engineers than creators. They command creatures summoned by their desire to perform anything they wish. Even though the Erus can accomplish anything and that existence is dependent on them, these beings create. They did not create time, but they did construct the being who gave birth to it. Everything from the fourth plane down to the first is on the list. What's important to them is that when humans refer to genuine deities that they worship (God of Life, Birth, Death, etc.), the Erus are the ones who created them since they are far above them. Deities and mortals are on the same level in their eyes. Beings from higher planes must never interact or exist with creatures from lower planes; if they do, the lower plane will cease to exist (including the memories that it has even existed). They are invincible to all forms of magic, space and time manipulation, and existence warping powers because these notions exist because of their influence. When seen from a higher viewpoint, everything from ethereal thoughts to the atoms of creation are sentient creatures since they only obey the Erus. The beings are known as "Wall Dividers" operate as barriers between the realms, separating the first plane from the other worlds. World-end apostles are regarded as their pets, and they are the living manifestation of the universe's desire for balance. These beings consume worlds to survive. Every Erus has contributed to the creation and preservation of existence; what distinguishes the NTH God from the others is that the NTH God has not been engaged in anything since the Erus split. The NTH God has done nothing and has not intervened in any decision made by his kin.

The concept of the planes of existence

After the Erus was divided into several bodies, they all had a common interest. These are beings with no identity that transcends time, age, gender, and everything else. Despite having distinct bodies, they are the same being. Everything in the universe that was produced after them was influenced by them. They began creating life from the highest point to the lowest point following their separation eons ago. The distance between the first and fourth planes is much smaller than the distance between the fourth and fifth planes. The structure from the fourth to the first plane is essential and understandable. As the fourth plane contains the notions that can, will, and will not be conceived by the mind. The third plane is concerned with the general balance of good and evil in the universe. The second plane is the true home of souls and the eternal home of mortals. Dimensions, beings, and the world itself reside inside the first level. The fifth plane has no connection to the previous planes. Even though planes represent various realities, the fifth plane is distinct from the others. The fifth plane is not a location, but rather the Erus themselves.

The First Plane's birth and struggle

The first plane was built last, after the others. In the elven lore books, just one creature was formed in the realm, whose name was "Deus Mundi Mater Omnium. "This creature is the pinnacle of creation since it incorporates masculine and female elements and is a perfect entity. The Erus instructed Deus Mundi to annihilate itself after its creation. As a result of its annihilation, stars, galaxies, and planets were formed from its bones. Humans, elves, animals, dwarves, beast-men, and other lux dominion species were all created as a result of the body fluids. The daemon race, spirits, fairies, dark elves, dragons, and other tenebris dominion creatures were all impacted by the blood and tears. Plants and trees sprang from the hair. The remainder of the body and organs shaped the multiverse's structure. Because the body was too large, distinct dimensions exist at the same moment but in separate locations. Second, the Erus warped the universe with its hands. That is why it is always dark outside at night, and why space is black and soundless. The source of life for all creatures and entities in this cosmos was dubbed "essence." The sacrifice "Deus Mundi mater omnium" made for the first plane was its life and soul, which spread across the first plane to give it its first breath of existence. The ultimate gift bestowed upon the beings of the first level is Deus Mundi Mater Omnium's will, which is magic. Mortals may temporarily modify the universe with little to no limits by employing numerous languages and orders. The only fuel they require is the energy or "essence" they have to perform marvels. The Erus' only action was to make mortals in this dimension more like them. This blessing is known as an "ability," and it is possessed by every mortal on the plane. Unlike magic, which is selective and dependent on "essence," abilities are a type of right a person has over the universe that allows him/her to do miracles that are distinct and separate from others. A power more akin to Erus, but nothing in comparison to the genuine thing.

The NTH God's Dispute

The NTH God did not choose after to do an action since the Erus split themselves until life was developed in the first plane. Human species and, in particular, daemon races fought each other in the realm of Liro (planet Earth), dividing the globe into two regions: the lux dominion and the tenebris dominion. The first man and woman were Vash and Eva, who were born from the bodily fluids of Deus Mundi Mater Omnium; nonetheless, the earliest daemons were made out of many spawns. The alto daemons were born as the manifestation of the Deus Mundi's blood while other demons are offsprings of the first three daemons, Murrkh, Vurdu, and Shiva who were created from its blood. These creatures' descendants are the major enforcers of strife between the two regions. Humans and daemons are the most populous in their realm. The purpose of their fight is to establish which race owns the Earth. Nobody knows when the hostility and fight for dominance began. Because there is supremacy and racism between the two dominions, there is a concrete tie of hatred between all races, even though they all descended from the same source. They fight for control of the planet, as each race has a stake in it. As the Erus watched from above, bloodshed and hate spread across the infant Liro. Until now, the Erus had shown no interest in any creation. They sought entertainment while humans and daemons fought hopelessly amongst themselves for no apparent cause. To add to the intrigue, the Erus chose to enter the war to have pure fun by utilizing the people of Liro as reincarnation vessels. Humans and daemons viewed this differently; they began to expect the coming of reincarnates to assist them in combat because the reincarnates' powers are godlike in comparison to the others. They utilized them as combat champions, and the slaughter grew more horrific. Because daemons have a poorer bond with essence than humans, they feed humans and their essences, making them smarter and more powerful. Noble daemons, on the other hand, do not require human essences to be saner or more powerful because they are materialized creatures of Deus's blood, as opposed to normal daemons, who were born after the blood changed into three beings and birthed subsequently. Humans exploit the daemons' dead bodies to manufacture strong battle weapons and materials.

THE NTH God's Punishment

This cycle of devastation lasted for thousands of years, with just one Erus unhappy with the outcome. The victims on the first plane routinely commit murder, while the Erus watches these atrocities with amusement. The NTH God's first move was to challenge his kin's verdict on Liro's races. For the first time, they were shocked by the lack of collaboration. The Erus collectively opted to punish him for his idea and exile him to the first plane to dwell with them because he chose to side with insignificant mortals rather than his kind. His consciousness was cast out onto the first plane, where he will live with mortals until he acknowledges he was wrong in response to their decision, he vowed vengeance by destroying everything they had achieved and promised to keep them from making the same mistake by merging them once again for good. He became the unusual person among them, yet they ignored his words and commitment. He made his first creation before being exiled. This wasn't a creation, but he split himself in two, giving birth to another Erus. The last born Erus is known as the "Contradictory God." The Nth God is referred to as the "NTH" since he has not yet produced anything. Another Erus, such as Destruction God, Creation God, and so on, is given these names since they were the ones who brought these notions into being. They all have the same capabilities and strengths and aren't restricted to just one. They are given these names to provide references and distinguish between each Erus' accomplishments. As the influence and embodiment of contradiction, the Contradictory God was formed. This implies that the all-powerful Erus' aims can be called into question. The NTH God is plotting his vengeance on the Erus for their treachery and greed. If the foretold disaster occurs, everything from the first to the fifth plane will be annihilated and reverted to its primordial state. He has been hiding in the shadows of the first world for all eternity, preparing his revenge that would consume all and lead to oblivion.
