

CHARACTER PROFILE: Annabelle Lee

STORY: PROJECT AXIS

AGE: 21

HEIGHT: 5 FT 6 inches

GENDER: Female

EYE COLOR: Blue

HAIR COLOR: Black

RACE: Italian-American

BODY MODIFICATIONS: Ear and naval piercings

MEDICAL CONDITIONS: None

CAREER: Private Investigator

EDUCATION: BSC Degree in Criminology FIU, Florida Miami

ROLE MODEL(S): Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Joan of Arc

KNOWN ALIASES: None

Bio

Annabelle is an attractive, fair, and slightly skinny woman with a strong desire for justice. In this corrupt environment, she is a feminist who aspires for fairness. She is a close friend of Stacey and Elijah, as well as their old classmate since middle school, and she is one of the main supporting characters in PROJECT-AXIS. She is a skilled self-defense professional with field experience and intuitive skills. She has always been a person who shares her criticism towards others no matter how the other party feels. She is a blend of an extrovert and an introvert since she only expresses her thoughts to those who can relate to them in some way. She sees herself as an advocate for equality throughout the United States of America, and as a law enforcement officer, she is obliged to that standard.

Though she is a feminist, she does not impose her beliefs on others; instead, she believes that achieving better for herself is the right thing to do. She seeks to break the gender barrier in specific careers by studying and using her abilities to her style rather than becoming a duplicate of others. Her greatest asset is not her beauty, commitment, or combat prowess, but rather her intellect. She has a very high IQ, but many people believe that because she is so beautiful, she cannot be bright. This statement does not offend her; rather, she sees it as an advantage in persuading others in undercover missions and tempting others to gather information. The only thing she is upset about is when people try to outwit her intelligence; she regards them as arrogant or simply ignorant.

Her personality is peaceful, yet when she sets her mind to something, she will see it through to the conclusion. She seemed to have been spoiled as a child, but she has matured to adjust to the real world. She even ignores her captain's orders and completes an investigation in which she was advised not to interfere. Everyone in the police department appears to be on good terms with her, but no one dares to get in her way because they wouldn't want to get on her bad side. She has even developed a reputation in Wynwood for herself since her determination is considered inspirational, and she is respected among police officers as a female with a strong desire for justice. Her father is the chief of the police headquarters where she works, and it is clear that their bond is unique among police officers. Her father, on the other hand, is just as determined as she is when it comes to their work, and he has even suspended her twice for violating orders. Her father is one of the friendliest police officers since many people, including criminals, come to him for counseling, and his personality is that of a loving person who rarely goes violent.

Her suspension was related to an investigation involving "the Ghost of Wynwood" in Miami. She got the closest to identifying the serial killer in the case out of hundreds of detectives worldwide. She saw him as an evil coward who primarily murdered women, and she was willing to go to any length to stop him. Her father and the majority of her coworkers recommended she give it up because the individual leaves no traces. She couldn't continue to be ignorant of the crimes taking place in Wynwood, so she left after her suspension to explore the matter herself. Even though the serial killer leaves no evidence, she discovered one pattern in his attacks: the nature of the perfumes he uses. She realized he must be a wealthy man because the autopsies of his victims contain microscopic residues of perfumes worth at least a thousand dollars in the price range. She is the first to narrow down the list of possible suspects in the region, but the killer fled before she could continue her investigation. She then learned from an informant that Stacey was accompanying a potential victim of the killer in the recent attacks. This incident is what prompted her to meet Stacey on the road and realize she needed to arrest the culprit and bring him to justice. She believes that if she gets close to the girl, she would eventually find the identity of the killer, and she also has a score to settle with Stacey.

History

Annabelle is the youngest of two daughters. Her father is a veteran cop, and her mother was an Italian supermodel who illegally came to the United States. Her father is a chubby Kentucky man with a heavy southern accent; her mother, on the other hand, is gorgeous for her age, and many people, including Annabelle, are intrigued as to how a countryman could marry such a beautiful person. Her older sister Vanessa is two years older than her, and they both bear the most similarity to their mother while bearing little resemblance to their father. Her father has light brown hair and blue eyes, and her mother has black hair and green eyes. The only noticeable feature they inherited from their father is his eye color. Her mother was a victim of human trafficking, which her father was investigating during his early years in the force, according to the story of how her parents met. He rescued and cared for their mother until they decided to marry.

Annabelle grew up in a loving family, and their father loved them so deeply that they were his only weakness. Her father is a friendly and accepting individual who does his best to care for his family, however, her mother is the stricter parent when it comes to reaching an agreement. He pampered Annabelle the moment she was born and made her see herself as her father's princess. He was present at every birthday and tea party, and he had such an impact on Annabelle's life that she began growing up to be a tomboy in elementary school. However, as she grew into adolescence, she grew increasingly distant from her father. She grew closer to her sister as she continued to learn about boys, friends, and school drama.

In middle school, she made a name for herself by transforming into a stunning young lady. She cut her hair shorter to differentiate herself from her nearly identical sister. She hung out with the most popular people at school, and her peer group was made up of jocks and cheerleaders. She was the crush of many boys in her middle school at the time, including Stacey, whom he fell for the first time they met. From middle school to high school, she and her sister were a powerful duo based only on their looks. She was not only beautiful, but she also managed to achieve straight A's while simultaneously being an active member of the theatrical and poetry clubs. She would sometimes be embarrassed by the fact that her father is a police officer and would try to hide that they were related since she preferred to go home in her sister's boyfriend's car.

She initially noticed and befriended Stacey in middle school, when he was conflicted over the mysterious case of "the activist." She eagerly assisted in investigating the mystery that surrounded the school till they discovered the culprit's identity. They began interacting from that point forward until high school when she grew more popular with her female friend group and Stacey was surrounded by a small group of close friends. She became like a princess that every boy wanted to impress in high school, even bullies tried to pick on other students to please her, but she was uninterested in their matters. Her sister was dating one of the principal's twins, and she began dating the school's most valued athlete. She started well in high school until the serial murders became more frequent than usual, even though Wynwood has a history of odd occurrences. Most students in the high school were accustomed to curfews, protection training, and emergency devices until she learned that Stacey had gone missing following the event with his guardian and kid brother. She was saddened by the news until her senior year when her high school boyfriend died of an overdose during an NFL scholarship trial.

After graduating from high school, she became an outspoken supporter of assisting others. Her concentration shifted to supporting law and order, and she later decided to follow in her father's footsteps and join the police department. Annabelle was voted the most likely to succeed in high school because many people assumed she would pursue a career in modeling or acting. After all, multiple scouts offered her a deal before she graduated. She eventually turned down their offer and decided to attend college. Her sister Vanessa, on the other hand, decided to be a model who aspires to be something bigger.

Her love life was a disappointment for her because most of the men she dated were either a disaster or a burden to her. Years later, and 8 months before the events of PROJECT-AXIS, she reunited with Stacey, and they began hanging out in the months that followed. This time, she began to develop feelings for him, and they became closer than they had ever been. Stacey turned her down after she proposed setting up their first date, and she went home alone. This prompted her to hold a grudge against Stacey to get an explanation as to why he didn't show up. Despite his affections for her, Stacey chose to avoid their relationship since he discovered that his close friend and old classmate Elijah Bellard had a crush on her since middle school and he couldn't live with the guilt of presenting her to him, resulting in a love triangle amongst friends. They haven't spoken since, and throughout that time she felt heartbroken and vented her frustration by handling police cases using unethical tactics. During that time, she was suspended for attempting to solve the Wynwood serial murder case and began her own investigation.

QUOTE

“I do the best I can with what I have; I don't care if I have more or less as long as I have what I need. I decided to become a cop to test my abilities and to remind myself not to believe in the fantasy that everything is fine when I know it isn't!”